

Silver Reflections

Acrylic on Canvas
120cm x 80cm

Silver forms rise and branch across a ground that moves from deep blue into moss and olive, like water seeping into desert earth. Mirrored along a single fold, the image becomes a doorway, a pair of figures, a spine, or roots reaching for light, depending on who is looking. Silver is the colour of reflection: it gives back whatever the viewer brings to it. The work asks how two opposing halves can hold one shape, and what grows in the seam where they meet.
